Let's Start!

What's this announcement about?

Learning Outcome

Exchange information about people's interests and backgrounds using a wider range of language.

Ask your partner:

- When was the last time you had to make an announcement? What did you say?
- When was the last time you watched a press conference? What was said?

Can Do Statements

- I can explain facts on work-related topics.
- I can exchange factual information and discuss future plans.
- I can give a supported argument about work-related processes that would benefit me and my employer.

Striving* to improve.

* To "strive" means to try very hard.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Hello everyone. As president of Holly's Wear, I am delighted to be updating you on the business practices of Holly's factory in Shalopolis.

Now, we were all recently made aware that Holly's factory in Shalopolis used to be affected by the practices of child labor. As things stand, I am very proud to inform the public that we have successfully turned the situation around.

This has been very complicated. The community has lived in severe poverty for generations and has become dependent on foreign companies for employment. Understandably, the needs of large families has led to the employment of children. But of course, we acknowledge the limited prospects that result for such early labourers.

At first, Tindasians objected to our policy announcement against hiring children. Families have apparently been sending their children to work for Holly's because our factory has always used stringent safety codes. Understandably, parents have been reluctant to send children to school hungry.

We have consulted with the reputable NGO, School For All Children and we are making strategic moves to introduce corporate social responsibility as a guiding principle. We are also working to integrate social concerns into our interaction with stakeholders.

With all of this, I am very pleased to announce that Holly's is now giving long-term contracts to adult employees, and an educational stipend for their school-aged children.

Finally, we are opening a new children's line of clothing called "Munchkins". In fact, partial profits will go toward developing access to clean drinking water throughout Shalopolis.

Updates on developments on our clothing line and in Shalopolis are available through our website. Thank you very much.

Learning Points

Present Perfect

You use the Present Perfect tense to talk about a past action or an action that began in the past that is connected to the present in some way.

You can use the Present Perfect tense to talk about experience.

This is how you form the Present Perfect:

subject + have + past participle

When you use the Present Perfect tense, you think about the past and present together. There is some connection between what happened in the past and now.

The Present Perfect is also used to emphasize the duration of a recent event.

Examples:

- We have all been recently made aware of the scandal.
- This has been a complicated situation for us.
- The community has become dependent on foreign aid.
- Poverty and need for employment has led to the employment of children.
- Our factory has always used strict safety codes.

Infinitive of Purpose

When expressing purpose, we normally use an infinitive of purpose (to + base form verb). It indicates the purpose or intention of an action.

The infinitive usually answers the question "Why?" We can use it after certain verbs or adjectives.

Examples:

- I'm delighted to make this announcements regarding our business practices.
- I am proud to inform that we are reverting the situation.
- Parents have been reluctant to send their children to school.
- We wish to integrate social responsibility into our new practices.
- We've been strategizing how to introduce corporate social responsibility as our main driving force.
